Unlike United's main customer service line—which often routes you through multiple automated menus—this number is optimized for direct human connection. Sometimes United cancels your return flight but offers a rebooking that's impractical—like a 36-hour layover or a red-eye arriving at 4 AM. You're not obligated to accept it. A live agent can process the refund immediately, even on Basic Economy fares, since the cancellation was airline-initiated. Don't settle for an unreasonable option just because it's "available." Agents can email digital vouchers to your phone within minutes, so you're not sleeping in the terminal. Even if the cancellation was weather-related, it's worth asking—sometimes exceptions are made.
